MUGHALS IRANIAN RELATIONS DURING SIXTEENTH CENTURY

Karim Najafi Barzegar
M.A. Ph.D.
Lecturer in History
Allama Tabatabai University,
Tehran, Iran.

ABOUT THE BOOK

The agitationist mood of saints who were not satisfied with the politico-socio policies of the successors of Timur highlights the growing authority of clergy class which resulted into the emergence of safavids. Among these Sarbedaran movement was a leading symbol for others in Khurasan and other parts of the Persia. The movements on one hand put an end to the barbaric rule of Mughals but paved the way for religious zealotry emerged during safavids.

The people of Hindustan and Persia developed closer relations than ever at the time when the Safavids were ruling over Persia and Timurids established themselves as rulers in Hindustan. This is a well known fact that Zahiruddin Babur, the fifth descendent of Timur, was the founder of the Timurid empire in India. He, as well as his successors, particularly Akbar, endevoured to follow the same traditions that the Timurids of Persia had acquired from their predecessors, particularly the cultural aspects of it.

Many factors caused the migration of the Persians to neighbouring countries, particularly towards Hindustan. The main reason was the hospitality of the courtiers and royal patronage to the development of fine arts, music, literature, architecture etc. Some of the artists and artisans came with Humayun when he invaded this country to regain his lost empire, while others were invited when he regained the throne. The legacy of old bonds continued in the form of cultural diplomacy during the sixteenth century. In the arena of political relations which are considered landmarks in the history of Hindustan and Persia were on their zenith during the reign of Akbar.

At the end a brief account of those immigrants whose achievements are recorded in the pages of history has also been given.

MUSLIM OF INDIA

Their Literature on Education, History, Politics, Religion, Socio-Economic and Communal Problems

Edited by
MOHAMMED HAROON
M.A.: M.Lib.Sc.
Assistant University Librarian
University of Delhi

ABOUT THE BOOK

The Muslims possess a distinct and impressive identity in the variegated milieu of social and national life of India. Though the community has undergone vicissitudes of unthinkable dimensions, yet so deep rooted are its traditions and culture that there has been an uninterrupted continuity in their march ahead. There has never been a dearth of thinkers and writers who have thought and written almost on every aspect of Muslim life in India. A galaxy to great and glorious Muslim men adorns the annals of India. Their contributions to the freedom struggle has never been less than anyone else. In post-independene years, the faith of the Muslims in their Indianness has helped them to overcome the harrowing experience during the twilight of the partition days. A lot of literature on the Muslims of India is flowing every year in the form of news items, general articles, pamphlets, books and research theses and there is always an urgent need to organise this information for fruitful utilisation. The present bibliography covers the publications theses from the earliest and articles published between 1980-1987 on all aspects of Muslims in India—their leaders, their religion, their education, their institutions, their politics, their personal laws, their customs and lastly the Hindu-Muslim relations. The information contained in over 3000 bibliographical entries in the present work has been distilled from about 150 journals and newspapers, about 500 books and about 100 research theses. The information about research theses is not only from the universities in India but also from the universities abroad Great Britain, USA and other countries.
